The Université Libre de Bruxelles : Université d'Europe (ULB)

Founded upon free-thinking principles, the ULB has sought to: foster critical thought, advocate independent enquiry, and favour the rejection of dogma in all its forms. Over its 175 years of existence, the ULB has remained true to these original ideals and has remained committed to the defence of democratic and humanist values.

The ULB has emerged as a leading European research and teaching university of global prominence. With its 21,000 students - 27% of whom come from abroad; and it's exceptionally cosmopolitan staff, it is an intrinsically international institution, open to both Europe and the wider world. Furthermore, located at the cross-roads of the Latin and Germanic traditions, the ULB has emerged as a privileged venue for dialogue and interaction on a truly European scale. The ULB has become a bridge between different existing academic traditions, and actively seeks to overcome disciplinary and customary boundaries, thus fostering heightened innovation and increased mutual understanding.

The ULB is a multifaceted institution which has 9 traditional faculties alongside a series of autonomous and specialized schools or institutes. The ULB offers a comprehensive set of academic programmes encompassing all disciplines and study cycles. With its three Nobel Prize winners, a Fields medal, three Wolf Prizes for physics, two Marie Curie Prizes and 29% of the awarded national Belgian Francqui prizes; the ULB is a major centre of excellence in a wide range of scientific fields. The quality of the ULB's research is recognised by the academic community the world over. Nor does the ULB shirk its social, societal and broader ethical commitments, which it meets by combining broad access to higher education, with excellent quality research, and an active role in furthering economic development in the regions where it is located (Brussels & Wallonia).

Located in the heart of Brussels - the bilingual capital of a federal state and the de facto administrative and political capital of the European Union (EU), as well as the seat of several multinational organizations and companies – the ULB has been at the heart European political adventure since inception in 1957. The University's pioneering European engagement was crystallized in the foundation one of the continent's interdisciplinary autonomous research and teaching institutes dedicated to EU studies: the Institut d'Etudes Européennes (IEE).

The Institut d'Etudes Européennes: A Centre of Excellence at the Heart of Europe (IEE)

The ULB's secular traditions of free enquiry and academic excellence are reflected in its Institut d'Etude Européennes (IEE), one of the oldest "Jean Monnet Centre of excellence". With its highly selective international recruiting process, and its numerous multidisciplinary research networks, the IEE occupies a unique and central position within the international EU studies community. Since its founding in 1963, the IEE has stood out as one of the leading institutes focusing on European and international issues. To sustain and develop its enviable reputation, the IEE has continued to invest considerable efforts in research and innovation, notably by successively creating and nurturing its 5 constituent research units: "European Law"; "European Politics"; "European History & Culture"; "European Politics" and "the EU in the World".

The cosmopolitan composition of the IEE's research-, academic-, and student-bodies illustrate its' remarkable openness; its' continued dynamism, and its' international attractiveness. Its 100-head strong international Faculty includes nationals from 15 countries; many of whom are leading members of trans-national research networks. If Primarily Belgian institute at its beginnings, the institute has become a truly European one.

The IEE offers seven MA programmes in either English or French. The academic quality and variety of its graduate and postgraduate European Studies Programmes is well established. At present, there are over 300 enrolled MA students from more than 50 countries; and since its beginnings the IEE has seen over 4000 graduates.

Furthermore, over the past 11 years the IEE has also developed an interdisciplinary PhD School in EU studies and is formally accredited by the French-speaking Belgian authorities. As with the IEE's other activities, its doctoral teaching is embedded in a series of international networks of excellence, ranging from the Jean Monnet Programmes of Excellence to the Erasmus Mundus Joint Doctorate programme. It has since 2004 lead the GARNET PhD School (within the EU's 6th FP); and since 2009 coordinates the Erasmus Mundus GEM PhD School (Globalisation, the EU, and Multilateralism) rooting its international cooperation with Boston University, Shanghai Fudan University, Waseda University-Tokyo, the United nation's University-Center for Regional integration Studies, ITAM-Mexico, Université de Genève, University of Warwick, and LUISS Guido Carli-Rome. All PhD students are welcomed into the department's formal research groups.

As a result, the Institut d'Etudes Européennes (IEE) at the Université Libre de Bruxelles (ULB) has come to be widely recognized as an international centre of excellence in higher education and research in EU studies. The IEE is also in constant dialogue with the Brussels-based communities of policy-makers. As a successful platform for pluralistic and critical debates on Europe, the institute has established itself as a prominent arena and a respected voice in the ongoing discussion on the state and future of European integration.

Its' well warranted reputation of distinction; alongside the heightened attraction and role of Brussels; have solidified the IEE-ULB's position at the centre of the international EU studies community. History, experience, geography and excellence have thus conspired to make the IEE one of the prominent rallying points – both physically; as well as, in terms of referencing within the international scholarly debate on the EU.

POST-DOCTORAL POSTING

CALL for APPLICATIONS

GR:EEN – Global Re-Ordering through Emerging European Networks

GR:EEN (Global Re-ordering: Evolution through European Networks), a European Commission FP7 competition funded project, will study the current and future role of the European Union in an emerging multi-polar world through a programme of stock-taking, multi-disciplinary research and complementary activities. Based in the University of Warwick's Centre for the Study of Globalisation and Regionalisation, the project constitutes a consortium of sixteen international partners from various disciplines and outlooks. The project will run over four years, commencing 1st March 2011, and will invest a total of €10 million into its research questions. Divided into ten research work packages, the project aims at an understanding of the prospective directions of the emerging global governance structures and Europe's place in them. Analysis will focus on the extant actors from the 20th century, the 21st century rising powers, the increasingly influential non-state actors (from civil and non-civil society) and the new transnational regulatory networks of public and private policy makers and regional agencies. The main objective of this project will attempt to offer both empirical and theoretical insight into how we might secure reform and innovation in the global order and the role that European insights into governmental innovation might play in that reform process.

The Associated Research Agenda:

The EU: a Legitimate and Efficient Institutionalized Global Actor in the Making

Discursive Analysis: Mapping the EU's international Discourse

The post-doctoral fellow will coordinate a broader research project called "The EU as a Global Discursive Actor". The project studies the impact of EU discourse on continuity and changes in world politics. More specifically, it targets three goals: 1) Identify the specificities of EU discourse on a number of issue-areas (trade, environment, human rights, security, etc) when compared to other significant actors in world politics, including EU member states, non-EU western countries and regional organizations; 2) Assess the reception, interpretation and integration of EU discourses on non-European actors, including intergovernmental organizations, transnational non-state actors, and emerging countries; 3) Explore the impact of EU discourses communicated to non-EU actors on behaviours and discourses of European actors such as EU institutions and EU member states, through mechanisms like feed-back loops, rhetorical entrapment and the quest for internal coherence. These goals will be pursued through a mix of qualitative and quantitative methods, including process-tracing, lexicometric analysis, and comparative case studies.

Detailed Function Description:

The 2011/12 academic year marks the launch of an 'Integrated Research Project, linked to the 7th Framework Programme called GR:EEN. As part of this multi-year research project focused on "Global Re-Ordering Evolution through Emerging European Networks" the IEE-ULB is charged with a multidimensional research agenda covering a broad range of issues centred on a series of questions related to "the EU and Global Governance: Multilateralism in an Emerging Multipolar World"

Within the framework of the aforementioned programme the IEE-ULB seeks to hire a Post-Doctoral Research fellow¹. Said person would be hired by the GR:EEN project and based at the IEE-ULB in Brussels. The hired individual will be directly responsible for part of the scientific agenda included in the project's programme. The Research Fellow will be involved in the conception, realization, production and promotion of the promised scientific deliverables.

The withheld researcher will be fully committed to the programme (in terms of working hours and scientific output) and will share in the responsibilities associated with the completion GR:EEN programme. The researcher's tasks will include:

- The organisation of one or two focused scientific workshops on the themes covered by the associated research agenda. These international workshops aim to bring together 9-12 leading scholars on the issues at hand. The researchers will also be a full and active member of said concerted research effort
- Organise a Case-Study Integrated Forum (CSIF), a public event understood as a research and out-reach platform aimed at confronting researchers and policy-makers engaged with the covered topics
- Produce a minimum of one peer-reviewed scientific publication on the researcher's own topic(s). The individual's own research interests and expertise are expected to lie within the above described research agenda.
- Ensure the follow-up and ultimate publication of an edited volume born from the research accomplished with the associated workshops.
- Fostering International Linkages and heighten the International profile and presence of the IEE and its GR:EEN participation
- As a full staff member, the withheld candidate will also be encouraged to fully integrate the community of researchers at the Institut d'Etudes Européennes, thus participating in the Institute's broader activities
- Lastly, the researcher will be invited to support and interact with the specific efforts deployed with an eye on ensuring the broader societal relevance of the accomplished research. As such, possible involvement in "policy-outreach" are to be expected

¹ As the purpose of the GR:EEN project is to enhance international mobility, researchers' applications hailing from Belgium, or having been active in Belgium for 2 years or more, will not be considered as having priority.
